

THE REPUBLIC OF BELARUS (SANCTIONS) (EU EXIT) REGULATIONS 2019
REPORT UNDER SECTION 18 OF THE SANCTIONS AND ANTI-MONEY
LAUNDERING ACT 2018 IN RELATION TO CRIMINAL OFFENCES

A: INTRODUCTION

1. This is a report under section 18 of the Sanctions and Anti-Money Laundering Act 2018 (“the Act”) in relation to the Republic of Belarus (Sanctions) (EU Exit) Regulations 2019 (“the Regulations”).
2. Section 18(2) of the Act requires a report to be laid before Parliament where regulations made under section 1 of the Act create offences for the purposes of enforcing any prohibitions or requirements imposed by those regulations, or for the purposes of preventing the circumvention of those prohibitions or requirements.
3. In accordance with section 18, this report: sets out the offences created by the Regulations (see Part B); explains why there are good reasons for the relevant prohibitions or requirements in the Regulations to be enforceable by criminal proceedings (Part C); and sets out the maximum terms of imprisonment that apply to those offences and why there are good reasons for those maximum terms (Part D).

B: THE OFFENCES

4. The principal prohibitions and requirements in the Regulations are aimed at encouraging the Government of Belarus to—
 - i. respect democratic principles and institutions, the separation of powers and the rule of law in Belarus,
 - ii. refrain from actions, policies or activities which repress civil society in Belarus,
 - iii. properly investigate and institute criminal proceedings against the persons responsible for the disappearances of Yury Zakharenka, Viktor Hanchar, Anatol Krasouski and Dzmitry Zavadski, and
 - iv. comply with international human rights law and to respect human rights, including in particular to—
 1. respect the right to life of persons in Belarus;
 2. respect the right of persons not to be subjected to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in Belarus, including inhuman or degrading conditions in prisons;
 3. afford persons in Belarus charged with criminal offences the right to a fair trial;
 4. respect the right to liberty and security, including refraining from the arbitrary arrest and detention of persons in Belarus;

5. afford journalists, human rights defenders and other persons in Belarus the right to freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly;
 6. secure the human rights of persons in Belarus without discrimination, including on the basis of a person's sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.
5. The Regulations confer a power on the Secretary of State to designate persons where the Secretary of State has reasonable grounds to suspect that that person is an involved person, and considers that the designation of that person is appropriate, having regard to the purposes stated in regulation 4, and the likely significant effects of the designation on that person. In these Regulations an 'involved person' means a person who:
- (a) is or has been involved in—
 - (i) conduct enabling or facilitating—
 - (aa) the disappearance of Yury Zakharanka, Viktor Hanchar, Anatol Krasouski or Dzmitry Zavadski, or
 - (bb) the failure to investigate properly or institute criminal proceedings against the persons responsible for those disappearances,
 - (ii) the commission of a serious human rights violation or abuse in Belarus,
 - (iii) the repression of civil society or democratic opposition in Belarus, or
 - (iv) other actions, policies or activities which undermine democracy or the rule of law in Belarus,
 - (b) is owned or controlled directly or indirectly (within the meaning of regulation 7) by a person who is or has been so involved,
 - (c) is acting on behalf of or at the direction of a person who is or has been so involved, or
 - (d) is a member of, or associated with, a person who is or has been so involved.
6. The Regulations then provide a number of prohibitions in relation to designated persons (including, no person is to deal with the assets of the person or provide funds or other economic resources to them or for their benefit). They also impose various prohibitions including on trade in restricted goods and technology.
7. The offences created by the Regulations fall into the following categories:
- a. contravening the principal prohibitions in the Regulations (e.g. breaching an asset-freeze or breaching a trade restriction) or trying to circumvent those principal prohibitions;
 - b. knowingly or recklessly providing false information for the purpose of obtaining a licence;
 - c. breaching the terms of a licence;

- d. failing to comply with requirements relating to the providing and recording of information;
 - e. disclosing confidential information in certain cases where the designation power has been used.
8. Details of each of the offences either created by these Regulations or which apply to the prohibitions and requirements created by the Regulations, and the maximum penalties relating to each offence, are set out:
- a. in relation to financial sanctions, in the table in Annex A to this report;
 - b. in relation to trade sanctions, in the table in Annex B to this report; and
 - c. in relation to the disclosure of confidential information where the designation power has been used, in the table in Annex C to this report.

C: REASONS FOR CREATING THE OFFENCES

9. In order to fulfil the stated purpose of this sanctions regime, the prohibitions and requirements in these Regulations need to be properly enforced.
10. There are several mechanisms through which these measures can be enforced without criminal proceedings. These include the imposition of monetary penalties for breaching financial sanctions and the seizure of goods being dealt with in contravention of certain trade sanctions measures.
11. Having the ability to take enforcement action through criminal proceedings, alongside these other enforcement measures, is appropriate for several reasons. The offences act as a deterrent in relation to the commission of serious acts and omissions which would undermine the purpose of the regime. They also allow the UK government to take a proportionate response where severity of the act or omission warrants it.
12. Importantly, the offences created by the Regulations are consistent with the offences contained in the legislation which the Regulations will replace. Failing to create offences would mean that there would be an enforcement gap between existing legislation and the Regulations. Special care has been taken to ensure that where conduct contravenes prohibitions and restrictions under these Regulations, only the offences set out in these regulations will be taken as having been committed.
13. These issues are addressed in more detail below in relation to the different types of offences in the Regulations.

Breaches of, and circumvention of, the principal financial prohibitions

14. The prohibitions contained in regulations 11 to 15 prohibit persons from dealing with funds or economic resources owned, held or controlled by a designated person and from making funds or economic resources available to or for the benefit of a designated person, where the person doing so knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that this is the case. Regulation 16 prohibits intentional conduct whose known object or effect is to circumvent, or enable or facilitate the contravention of, any of those prohibitions.

15. A breach of these prohibitions is a serious matter because such actions undermine the purpose of the sanctions regime. In this case, breaches could result in the flow of funds to those who involved in activities that the regime is intended to deter such as undermining democratic principles and institutions, the separation of powers and the rule of law in Belarus or the repression of civil society in Belarus.
16. The ability to institute criminal proceedings in relation to these matters serves as an effective deterrent. It also enables the UK government to take a proportionate response which corresponds to the severity of any breach.
17. The ability to institute criminal proceedings sits alongside other enforcement measures relating to financial sanctions. In particular, the Regulations provide the Office of Financial Sanctions Implementation (OFSI) with the ability to impose civil monetary penalties under Part 8 of the Policing and Crime Act 2017 to enforce breaches of these prohibitions¹. Enabling these prohibitions to be enforceable by criminal proceedings alongside these other enforcement measures ensures that a range of enforcement options is available to enforcement bodies, enabling them to take action that is proportionate to the breach in question.
18. The Regulations are consistent with, but will not duplicate, existing financial sanctions offences. In particular, the financial sanctions offences in the Regulations will replace financial sanctions offences and penalties that were created by the Belarus (Asset-Freezing) Regulations 2013 (S.I. 2013/164). This will ensure that there is no gap in the UK government's ability to enforce financial sanctions relating to human rights issues in Belarus.
19. The offences in the Regulations are also consistent with those contained in other legislation, including: Part 1 of the Terrorist Asset-Freezing etc. Act 2010; Schedule 3 to the Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001; and Schedule 7 to the Counter-Terrorism Act 2008. However, each of these legislative regimes have a different underlying purpose and basis for designation (involvement in terrorist activity, terrorist financing, threats to UK national security) and so cannot be directed to breaches of the financial prohibitions in the Regulations. There is therefore no overlap between the criminal offences in the Regulations and other criminal offences relating to financial sanctions that will continue in domestic legislation once the Regulations come into force.

Breaches of, and circumvention of, the principal trade prohibitions

20. Breaches of the principal trade prohibitions are a serious matter as they undermine sanctions which are in place to constrain the Government of Belarus' ability to engage in human rights violations or the repression of civil society by denying them access to restricted goods, technology and services (including goods and technology which may be used for internal repression purposes). Breaches of these prohibitions, or acts circumventing them, have the potential to facilitate repression or human rights abuses in Belarus. Creating criminal offences serves as an effective deterrent for such serious actions.
21. There are other enforcement tools available in relation to trade sanctions, most notably the powers contained in the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 to issue compound penalties, and to seize and dispose of goods where they are being dealt with in contravention of trade sanctions. The ability to institute criminal proceedings sits alongside these other powers and provides the government with a suite of tools to police and ensure compliance with trade sanctions and ensure that there are penalties that are appropriate to the seriousness of breaches of sanctions measures.
22. The Regulations replace offences related to trade sanctions contained in the Export Control (Belarus) and (Syria Amendment) Order 2011 (S.I. 2011/2010) ("the 2011 Order") which is made under the Export Control Act 2002 and section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. The relevant provisions of the 2011 Order will be revoked by the Regulations, ensuring that there is no overlap. The Regulations will also supplement other export control prohibitions relating to military goods and technology in the Export Control Order 2008 and regulation 65 ensures there is no direct overlap between offences committed under that Order and the Regulations.

Section 68 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 provides offences in relation to the export of prohibited or restricted goods and so such an offence has not been created by the Regulations.

Breaches of prohibitions and requirements relating to licensing

23. The licensing offences are intended to ensure that people do not obtain licences based on false information or documents and also that any licence conditions are complied with. The creation of criminal offences will help ensure robust compliance with the Regulations. The system of licensing cannot effectively operate without a strong disincentive to breaching the terms of a licence or making misleading applications.
24. The licensing offences are consistent with those currently applicable under the existing Belarus sanctions regime and domestic export control legislation (including the strict liability offences in relation to purporting to act under the authority of licence).

Breaches of requirements relating to information

25. As set out in Annexes A and B, the Regulations require:
- a. banks and other relevant firms, businesses and professions to report relevant information to the Treasury in relation to financial sanctions;
 - b. designated persons to provide information concerning their assets to the Treasury;
 - c. persons to register or record information relevant to general trade licences.
26. Enabling requirements to be enforceable by criminal proceedings ensures greater compliance with the Regulations. The Treasury relies on reporting by (a) relevant firms and (b) designated persons to assess compliance with the financial sanctions Regulations, and is better able to target its compliance efforts according to the information received.
27. In relation to general trade licences, the offences will help ensure that use of any such general licences can be properly monitored and enforced. The use of a general trade licence requires auditing to ensure that activity undertaken is in line with the terms of the licence. Without criminal penalties, there would be no means to compel licence-holders to provide the relevant information. This is in line with current practice and related offences in respect of use of general licences for controlled goods and technology under the Export Control Order 2008.

Breaches of the confidential information prohibitions

28. Regulation 9 contains provisions relating to the treatment of information relating to the statement of reasons for a person's designation and states that in certain circumstances the Secretary of State may specify that any of that information should be treated as confidential.

A breach of the prohibition on the disclosure of confidential information is a serious matter because disclosing information supporting the reasons why a person has been designated, that is not already available to the public from other sources, could undermine national security or damage international relations or could impede the prevention or detection of serious crime in the UK or elsewhere.

The ability to institute criminal proceedings in relation to these matters serves as an effective deterrent. It also enables the UK government to take a proportionate response which corresponds to the severity of any breach.

D: REASONS FOR MAXIMUM PENALTIES

29. The penalties imposed by the Regulations are set out in Annexes A, B and C. In all cases the penalties are either consistent with penalties relating to offences in legislation that will be replaced by the Regulations or consistent with similar offences in other existing legislation. Further detail on the maximum sentences relating to the different categories of offence is set out below.

Breaches of, and circumvention of, the principal financial prohibitions

30. In relation to financial sanctions, the government committed in the White Paper consultation on sanctions² to ensure consistency of offences and penalties for financial sanctions contained across domestic legislation. In accordance with that commitment, the Regulations provide for penalties consistent with those provided for in the Policing and Crime Act 2017³. The maximum sentence on indictment for financial sanctions was increased by that Act from two years to seven years and there is no good reason for the government to revisit the level of penalties on exit from the EU. The government considers the maximum penalty provides an effective deterrent and is proportionate compared to other serious crime penalties.

Breaches of, and circumvention of, the principal trade prohibitions

31. The maximum term of imprisonment for offences related to breaches of the principal trade prohibitions in these Regulations, or circumvention of them, is ten years. This is in line with the penalties in Article 6(1)(b) of the 2011 Order, which contains equivalent offences. The 10 year maximum penalty is considered to be an effective deterrent and is proportionate to the seriousness of the offence.
32. The Regulations are also consistent with Article 6(4) of the 2011 Order in that they modify the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 to increase the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence of breaching export controls from seven years to 10 years. This increase ensures that the maximum term of imprisonment for breaches of export controls in this Regulation is aligned with the maximum penalties for breaches under the 2011 Order. An industry association stakeholder has commented that such provision has “a beneficial effect in assisting export control compliance staff within companies to get the attention of their colleagues on export control matters”.⁴
33. It should be noted that existing penalties referred to in Article 6(3) of the 2011 Order are set at a maximum of two years’ imprisonment. This is because the offences related to these penalties were made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, which caps penalties at two years (under Schedule 2(1)(d) of that Act). These penalties are currently out of line with domestic penalties for other services that assist prohibited export and trade activities, and do not reflect the serious nature of breaches of trade sanctions. We have therefore harmonised the penalties for these offences (with the exception of the trade licensing offences) with the 10-year maximum penalties currently available for breaches of similar sanctions prohibitions, for example under Article 6(1) of the 2011 Order. Aligning the enforcement of trade sanctions and other export controls is appropriate because breaches of trade sanctions are equally as serious as other breaches of export controls.

³ The maximum terms of imprisonment for indictable offences under Schedule 3 to the Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001 and Schedule 7 to the Counter-Terrorism Act 2008 were increased from two years to a maximum of seven years and, for summary offences under those provisions, the maximum terms of imprisonment were increased from three months to 12 months (this being six months for offences committed before section 154(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 comes into force).

Licensing and information offences

34. The Regulations provide that the maximum term of imprisonment for financial sanctions licensing offences is 7 years imprisonment. Due to the scope for circumventing sanctions through improper use of a financial sanctions licence, the Secretary of State considers there are good reasons for the maximum term of imprisonment provided for licensing offences under the Regulations to be set at the same level as for breaches of the principal financial prohibitions.
35. The Regulations provide that the maximum term of imprisonment for financial sanctions information offences is 6 months. The level of harm associated with a failure to provide information, that is not related with another form of breach, is not deemed sufficiently high to warrant a higher maximum sentence.
36. The Regulations provide that the maximum term of imprisonment for trade licensing and information offences is two years' imprisonment, which is in line with equivalent domestic export control and sanctions legislation, for example under article 6(3) of the 2011 Order. The Secretary of State considers that there are good reasons to ensure that the maximum terms of imprisonment provided for under the Regulations are consistent with that legislation. There is a good reason for a lesser maximum term of imprisonment for these offences, as compared with the offences relating to the principal prohibitions, since while penalties need to be set at a level that promotes compliance, breaches are unlikely to result in the same level of harm as for breaches of the principal prohibitions.
37. The Regulations provide that the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence of disclosure of confidential information is two years, which is in line with the equivalent offence under the Terrorist Asset-Freezing etc. Act 2010.

E: CONCLUSIONS

38. As set out in this report:
 - a. There are good reasons for each of the prohibitions and requirements set out in the Regulations to be enforceable by criminal proceedings. The ability to enforce these measures by criminal proceedings is an effective deterrent, it is consistent with existing legislation and, in conjunction with the use of other enforcement measures, it enables the government to take a proportionate response to potentially serious acts and omissions which would undermine the purpose of the sanctions regime. Importantly, these Regulations do not duplicate any offences that will exist when these Regulations come into force.

- b. There are also good reasons for the maximum terms of imprisonment that attach to those offences: the maximum penalties are consistent with penalties relating to offences in legislation that will be replaced by the Regulations, or consistent with similar offences in other existing legislation; they are an effective deterrent; and they are proportionate to the seriousness of the types of offences to which they relate.
