7. Policy background

- What is being done and why

7.1 The Government has been clear that it sees reducing the economic deficit as its most urgent task. The Budget and Spending Review made reforms to the tax credits system to tackle the deficit in a fair way to ensure that tax credits are targeted at those who need them most.

7.2 The Government has taken action in the June Budget and this Spending Review to help low-income families. To ensure support is better-targeted at low-income families with children, the Government has recycled some welfare savings into the Child Tax Credit. The child element of the Child Tax Credit will be increased by £180 above indexation in 2011-12 and £110 above indexation in 2012-13. These steps have ensured that there is no measurable impact on child poverty from all modelled Budget and Spending Review changes to 2012-13.

7.3 To pursue those objectives the regulations change certain rates and thresholds.

- to increase the withdrawal rate of Working Tax Credit and CTC from 39% to 41%.
- to increase the CTC withdrawal rate (family element) from 6.67 % to 41%
- to freeze the rate of the Working Tax Credit basic and the 30 hour element.
- The income threshold for CTC only is decreased to £15,860 per year.
- Remove the baby element, currently available to families with a baby aged under one.
- to reduce the threshold by which families are eligible to receive tax credits from incomes of £50,000 to £40,000.
- to reduce the income disregard for in-year rises in income from £25,000 to £10,000.
- Increase the child element of CTC by £180 above indexation
- Working Tax Credit elements in the schedule have increased by 3.1% per cent or have remained the same.

Report required under section 41 of the Tax Credits Act 2002

Section 41 of the Tax Credits Act 2002, requires a review, each tax year, of certain monetary amounts that are prescribed in regulations, to see whether they have retained their value in relation to prices. A report of that review must be laid before each House of Parliament, stating what each amount would have been, if it had retained its value against prices.

The requirement applies to any monetary amount prescribed under the following provisions:

- The income thresholds at which each tax credit will start to be withdrawn: these are prescribed under section 7(1)(a) of the Act.
- The income threshold at which the family element of the child tax credit will start to be withdrawn: this is prescribed under section 13(2) of the Act.
- Any thresholds relating to changes in income between the current tax year and the previous tax year as prescribed under section 7(3).
- The amounts for the various elements of child tax credit as prescribed under section 9 and for those of working tax credit under section 11 of the Act.

The overall level of prices as measured by the change in the Consumer Price Index from September 2009 to September 2010 has increased by 3.1 per cent. Not all of the monetary amounts have retained or increased their value in relation to the general level of the prices in the United Kingdom. The table attached shows:

(a) the current rate (2010-11 tax year) of each element/threshold;

(b) the proposed rate of each element/threshold for the new tax year (2011-12), as announced in the June 2010 Budget and the 22 October 2010 Spending Review;

(c) the difference between the current rates and the proposed new rates announced in the Budget and the Spending Review and published in the “Annual up-rating of certain tax and tax credits rates and thresholds”; and

(d) the amount of each element/threshold if the rate had been changed in line with the change in the general level of prices.
