7. Policy background

What is being done and why?

7.1 The Police, Crime, Sentencing and Courts Act 2022 established three new powers for Counter-Terrorism Policing: personal (new section 43C TACT 2000) and premises search powers, and an urgent power of arrest. These powers were taken in response to recommendations made by Jonathan Hall QC, the Independent Reviewer of Terrorism Legislation, following his independent review of the Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) used to supervise terrorist and terrorism-risk offenders on licence<sup>1</sup>. Mr Hall QC’s review was commissioned by the Home Secretary following the terrorist attack at Fishmongers’ Hall in November 2019. The Fishmongers’ Hall Prevention of Future Deaths report also recommended that a new power of personal search be created<sup>2</sup>.

7.2 The section 43C personal search power enables the police to stop and search a terrorist or terrorism-connected offender who has been released on licence, for purposes connected with protecting the public from a risk of terrorism. The power will apply UK-wide and will only be used against those terrorist and terrorism-connected offenders that are required to submit to the search by their licence conditions. In most cases, the Parole Board will determine whether it is appropriate for the offender, when released, to have this licence condition expressed as part of the conditions of their release. This assessment will be based on a contemporary assessment of the offender’s risk profile i.e. whether or not they are judged to represent a high or very high risk to the public.

- 7.3 Section 47AA of TACT 2000 sets out that the Secretary of State is required to prepare a code of practice containing guidance about the exercise of search powers that are conferred by that Act. The Police, Crime, Sentencing and Courts Act 2022 (Consequential Provision) Regulations 2022 amended section 47AA of TACT 2000 so that it also applies to new section 43C in TACT 2000.
- 7.4 The Government has revised the search powers Code to reflect the new section 43C stop and search power, setting out for police officers the basic principles for its use and clarity on its scope. This includes providing guidance on the thresholds to be met before the power can be used, scenarios in which it might be appropriate for use, the powers of seizure associated with the search power, and the limitations on the clothing that a person can be required to remove when the section 43C power is being exercised by the police.
- 7.5 Given the existing version of the Code was brought into force in 2012, the Government has also taken this opportunity to make other minor amendments to the Code to ensure it accurately reflects current practice, legislation, terminology and organisational responsibilities. These amendments include reflecting the creation of Police and Crime Commissioners, the establishment of the College of Policing and its production of Authorised Professional Practice, the most up-to-date version of the Government's counter-terrorism strategy (CONTEST), and clarifying the authorisation process to stop and search individuals under section 47A of TACT 2000. The revised Code also highlights the need for the police to ensure that in the discharge of their functions they have regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of all persons under the age of 18.
- 7.6 The revised Code promotes the fundamental principles to be observed by the police and helps preserve the effectiveness of, and public confidence in, the use of police powers to stop and search under TACT 2000.
